

OK Karaoke is very Leeds – a little bit glamorous, a little bit different and a lot of fun a good time.

“I think the whole notion of segregating people up into different areas with different types of bars appealing to different people has been done and that wasn’t necessarily a bad thing.

“But it’s also great to have somewhere that everyone can come to, somewhere which offers good service and a good product but at the same time doesn’t take itself too seriously.

“It’s fine to go out and get dressed up in designer gear and stand around posing drinking beer in trendy bars and stuff but it’s also great to go out and be able to forget all that for a night and just have a laugh.

“I know the whole idea of karaoke presented in this way may seem a bit off the wall and the notion of having a get together like this might take some time to catch on.

“But we’ve seen what it’s like in Japan and how big it is in London as well and we’re convinced that once Leeds has tried it people will love it here too.

“Let’s face it, OK Karaoke is very Leeds – a little bit glamorous, a little bit different and a lot of fun.”
